Calling aspiring writers to enter the most well-known poetry festival in the UK, the Ledbury Poetry Festival.

Follow the link <https://www.poetry-festival.co.uk/ledbury-poetry-competition/>

In 2003, I entered my Year 3 class (from Thomas Hassall Anglican College) and we won FIRST and THIRD place which was a very special achievement in an international competition.

I recently sent an email to all College families explaining the rules (if you did not receive this email then please check your email details with the office).

There is no set theme. Here is a link to the rules: <https://www.poetry-festival.co.uk/ledbury-poetry-competition/ledbury-poetry-competition-rules-2017/>

Suggested literacy techniques:

Suggested language features: Alliteration; assonance (the same vowel sound is repeated but the consonants are different; he passed her a sharp, dark glance, shot a cool, foolish look across the room); hyperbole; similes; metaphors; personification; onomatopoeia; oxymoron (bitter sweet); pathos (language which evokes pity) and rhythm - Tennyson's poem The Lady of Shallot uses a strong internal rhythm to build up the sense of unrelenting monotony in the poem.

Students are able to write any style of poem. However, I would suggest it is better to write poems which do not rhyme (unless you are as talented as Roald Dahl).
